About the Law Reform Commission

The Law Reform Commission is an independent statutory body established by the Law Reform Commission Act 1975. The Commission's principal role is to keep the law under review and to make proposals for reform, in particular by recommending the enactment of legislation to clarify and modernise the law. Since it was established, the Commission has published over 200 documents (Working Papers, Consultation Papers, Issues Papers and Reports) containing proposals for law reform and these are all available at www.lawreform.ie. Most of these proposals have contributed in a significant way to the development and enactment of reforming legislation.

The Commission's role is carried out primarily under a Programme of Law Reform. Its Fourth Programme of Law Reform was prepared by the Commission following broad consultation and discussion. In accordance with the 1975 Act, it was approved by the Government in October 2013 and placed before both Houses of the Oireachtas. The Commission also works on specific matters referred to it by the Attorney General under the 1975 Act.

The Commission's Access to Legislation project makes legislation in its current state (as amended rather than as enacted) more easily accessible to the public in three main outputs: the Legislation Directory, the Classified List and the Revised Acts. The Legislation Directory comprises electronically searchable indexes of amendments to primary and secondary legislation and important related information. The Classified List is a separate list of all Acts of the Oireachtas that remain in force organised under 36 major subject-matter headings. Revised Acts bring together all amendments and changes to an Act in a single text. The Commission provides online access to selected Revised Acts that were enacted before 2006 and Revised Acts are available for all Acts enacted from 2006 onwards (other than Finance and Social Welfare Acts) that have been textually amended.

INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW

1. The Inventory forms part of a project on international obligations in the Commission's Fourth Programme of Law Reform

This Draft Inventory of Ireland's International Agreements forms one of the two components of the research conducted under Project 10 in the Commission's Fourth Programme of Law Reform, concerning the domestic implementation of international obligations. The second component will involve the publication later in 2018 of a Discussion Paper that examines the methodology and models used in the implementation of the State's international obligations, as well as Ireland's implementation practices, including a number of illustrative case studies. The Discussion Paper will differ from many other Commission publications, in that it will be descriptive and will not contain recommendations for reform.¹

2. The Inventory is primarily derived from the Irish Treaty Series (ITS)

The Commission's Inventory contains 1,400 entries, and the vast majority of these have been derived from the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade's Irish Treaty Series (ITS), which has compiled the most extensive record of Ireland's treaty obligations to date. The Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade has recorded Ireland's international treaty obligations in the ITS, which details international agreements which have entered into force with respect to Ireland from 1930 onwards. It includes a digital full-text record of all post-1998 treaties and a selection of pre-1998 treaties online.

3. The ITS contains a list of Ireland's binding international agreements

The ITS contains those international agreements that have entered into force with respect to Ireland and so are binding in international law on the State. An important distinction that arises in this respect is between, on the one hand, agreements that have been signed by the State subject to ratification or acceptance and, on the other hand, those that have been ratified, acceded to or accepted by the State. Binding obligations in international law arise when a state expresses its consent to be bound.² In the case of international agreements, signing a treaty subject to ratification or acceptance has some limited effect, in that the state involved is obliged to refrain from acts that would defeat the object and purpose of the treaty.³ However, a state's consent to be bound by the treaty arises only when it expresses this through acts of ratification, accession or acceptance, or any special procedure specified by the treaty, although it may be possible to sign a treaty without reservation as to ratification or acceptance, ie to consent to be bound via the signature itself.⁴ The act of ratification, accession or acceptance represents a common means of expression of consent to be bound by the State with regard to multilateral treaties, with some exceptions.⁵ Some international treaties also stipulate that the ratification of, accession to or acceptance of any subsequent or additional act is to be regarded as becoming party to the original treaty. As such, on certain occasions when the State ratified, acceded to or accepted an act amending or revising an international treaty, it established itself as a party to the original treaty (for example, by ratifying the Paris Act of 1971, thereby acceding to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works of 1886⁶). These alternative modalities under international law are reflected in the Commission's Inventory.

⁴ An example of this can be approval or notification of the completion of procedures required for entry into force. The Universal Postal Convention and Final Protocol done at Bucharest on 5 October 2004 provides that the rules in the Convention have been drawn up subject to article 25.4 of the Constitution of the Universal Postal Union. Article 25.3 of the Constitution of the Universal Postal Union provides that approval of the acts of the Universal Postal Union shall be governed by the constitutional regulations of each signatory country. Ireland deposited its instrument of approval with the Director-General of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union on 15 April 2008.

The procedure for ratification of treaties is generally a matter of domestic law, and is subject to different constitutional requirements around the world.⁷ In Ireland, Article 29.5.1° of the Constitution of Ireland (Bunreacht na hÉireann) provides that every international agreement to which the State becomes a party must be laid before Dáil Éireann and Article 29.5.2° provides that the State shall not be bound by any international agreement involving a charge upon public funds unless the terms of the agreement have been approved by Dáil Éireann. This means that Ireland cannot become a party to an international agreement involving a charge on public funds unless it has been approved by a majority in Dáil Éireann. Although Article 29.5.3° provides that certain international agreements of a technical and administrative character formally enjoy an exemption from the requirements set out in sub-sections 1 and 2, it is the practice of the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade to lay such agreements before Dáil Éireann as well.⁸

A state may sign and ratify an international agreement without reservation, or may expressly notify a depository that all requirements for entry into force of that agreement have been completed. A state may also append reservations or declarations when signing or ratifying an agreement, provided that such reservations and declarations do not contradict the object and purpose of the agreement itself, in which case other states parties may object to the reservation or declaration.⁹ Ireland may also object to reservations or declarations made by other states. In the case of bilateral agreements, Ireland and the other party may exchange notes or letters post-signature to bring the agreement into force, or alternatively provide for ratification by both parties.

The ITS aims to provide and maintain a complete list of binding international agreements to which Ireland is a party, together with related “treaty actions” such as reservations or declarations to any such agreements.¹⁰ Thus, the ITS does not contain agreements that have been signed by the State subject to ratification and which have not yet been ratified by Ireland. Nor does it include agreements that have been ratified by Ireland but which have not yet entered into force. A separate list of agreements that have been signed by Ireland, but not yet ratified, is maintained on the ITS webpage.

4. The Inventory includes both signed and ratified international agreements

The Commission’s Inventory aims to be exhaustive, including all forms of expression of consent to be bound by an international agreement. The Commission’s Inventory includes international agreements that the State has signed subject to ratification or acceptance as well as those it has ratified. It therefore includes agreements that it would not be appropriate to include in the ITS. The Commission has included these agreements in order to provide the public, the business community, as well as various professionals (legal practitioners, policy-makers from central and local government, non-governmental organisations, and judges) with information that may assist them to ascertain not only the international agreements in force to which Ireland is a party (the contents of the ITS) but also instruments that may at some point become binding if and when they are ratified. While these additional instruments in the Commission’s Inventory may not become binding for some time (or at all), their inclusion is intended to provide signposts for the future. The Inventory’s entries also include agreements that have not yet entered into force globally¹¹ as well as agreements that have, in effect, been repealed (that, in the language of international law, have been “denounced” or otherwise terminated).

¹⁰ International obligations may also arise as a result of customary international law or general principles of law, such as under Article 38(1)(b) and (c) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. They may also arise, for example, from unilateral declarations made by plenipotentiaries in the course of negotiations: see the decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice in Legal Status of Eastern Greenland (Denmark v Norway) (1933) PCIJ Rep Series A/B No 53; and of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in Case Concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear (Cambodia v Thailand) (Merits) [1962] ICJ Rep 1, Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v France) [1974] ICJ Rep 253 and Nuclear Tests (Australia v France) [1974] ICJ Rep 457. In the Nuclear Tests cases, the ICJ, referring to the Ihlen Declaration that was at issue in the Eastern Greenland case, stated that a unilateral declaration, “even though not made within the context of international negotiations, is binding. In these circumstances, nothing in the nature of a quid pro quo nor any subsequent acceptance of the declaration, nor even any reply or reaction from other States, is required for the declaration to take effect, since such a requirement would be inconsistent with the strictly unilateral nature of the juridical act by which the pronouncement by the State was made.” ([1974] ICJ Rep 267 [43] and 472 [46]). The present Inventory does not concern itself with such obligations.

5. The Inventory is organised under 38 subject headings and linked to corresponding domestic legislation to assist accessibility

The Commission has also organised the entries in the Inventory under 38 subject-based headings: see below. This is intended to be helpful in terms of the accessibility of the entries, in particular for those who may seek information on particular subject areas, such as Environment, Family Law or Taxation. This mirrors the Commission’s existing approach to making domestic legislation more accessible by presenting it in subject-matter form, through the publication of the Classified List of In-Force Legislation, which groups Irish domestic legislation under 36 subject headings.¹²

In keeping with that approach to accessibility, the Commission’s Inventory has attempted where possible to link each entry with corresponding domestic measures in primary or, as the case may be, secondary legislation.

This approach to the Inventory is also consistent with Article 29.6 of the Constitution of Ireland (Bunreacht na hÉireann), which provides that no international agreement shall be part of the domestic law of the State, except as may be determined by the legislature (the Oireachtas). In terms of international law, this makes Ireland a “dualist” state, where international law does not, of itself, form part of the domestic legal sphere insofar as international agreements are concerned. “Dualism” as opposed to “monism” distinguishes between international law and domestic law, and holds that international law standards can be included in a state’s own laws only when they are incorporated by national legislation into the state’s legal order.¹³ Monism, on the other hand, presumes the unity of the national and international legal orders and may simultaneously give primacy to international law over national law. As such, as a dualist state, expressions of Ireland’s consent to be bound by international agreements do not, alone, have any binding effect in domestic law. Rather, international treaty obligations must be implemented through requirements or provides for a specific date of entry into force. For example, the Protocol of amendment to the European Convention for the Protection of Animals Kept for Farming Purposes adopted at Strasbourg on 6 February 1992 provides that the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date on which all Parties to the European Convention for the Protection of Animals kept for Farming Purposes have become parties to the protocol. As of July 2018, the protocol has not entered into force.

domestic legislation if they are to form part of the domestic law of the State. In some cases, relevant legislation expressly stipulates that a treaty or certain treaty provisions ‘shall have the force of law’ and such treaties are also included in the schedule of the relevant Act or statutory instrument.¹⁴ In other cases, however, legislation giving effect to requirements under an international obligation does not expressly mention the treaty itself.¹⁵ In both instances, the Inventory attempts to connect domestic legislation to the corresponding international treaty obligation. In other instances, it may not be necessary to give effect at the domestic level to the obligations contained in an agreement, or existing legislation or rules of common law may be sufficient.

6. Format of each entry in the Inventory

Each entry in the Inventory is organised under the following 13 sub-headings:

- (a) the Irish Treaty Series (ITS) Number (where applicable);¹⁶
- (b) the name of the international agreement, for example, the [UN] Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989);
- (c) the Depository, for example, the United Nations Organization in the case of UN Conventions (the corresponding state party in the case of bilateral agreements);
- (d) when and where the international agreement was concluded initially;
- (e) when Ireland signed the agreement;
- (f) whether Ireland has ratified or otherwise agreed to be bound by the agreement;

¹⁴ For example, the Sea Pollution (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2006 includes the 2001 International Convention on Civil Liability for Bunker Oil Pollution Damage in its Schedule. See similarly the Diplomatic Relations and Immunities Act 1967 and the Data Protection Act 2018.

¹⁶ The ITS numbers have been retrieved from <https://www.dfa.ie/our-role-policies/international-priorities/international-law/find-a-treaty/>. Where a treaty has not yet been assigned such a number, the draft Inventory indicates this status as ‘N/A’. Where a treaty is not in force with respect to Ireland, either because Ireland has signed but has not yet ratified the treaty, or because the treaty has not entered into force at a global level, the Inventory states “Not ratified” or “Not in force” respectively.

(g) the date on which Ireland ratified or otherwise agreed to be bound by the agreement (where applicable);

(h) any additional treaty action, such as whether a reservation or declaration has been entered and whether the State has subsequently withdrawn the reservation or declaration;

(i) the date when the international agreement entered into force for the State;

(j) the date when the international agreement entered into force generally (most treaties require a certain number of ratifications to enter into force generally);

(k) the relevant domestic legislation (Act or statutory instrument) that appears to correspond to the international agreement (where applicable);¹⁷

(l) the name of Department of State with responsibility for the relevant domestic legislation; and

(m) the entry for the relevant domestic legislation in the Commission's Classified List of In-Force Legislation;

(n) in the separate web version of the Inventory (not this version) a hyperlink enabling access to the full text of the international agreement is available.¹⁸

Certain international agreements are identified in bold typeface, to indicate that a supplementary, additional or otherwise amending agreement follows in italics. Italic typeface is also used for international agreements that are not ratified, not yet in force or not included in the ITS.

7. The Inventory's 38 subject-matter headings

As noted, the Inventory is divided into 38 subject-matter headings. These headings have been derived in part from the United Nations Treaty Series categorisation and in part from ¹⁷ In certain areas, for example, merchant shipping and safety of life at sea in the Transport subject heading, where there is regular and ongoing implementation of amendments to international agreements through statutory instruments, the Inventory does not contain all relevant statutory activity. In such cases, the relevant primary legislation, the originating statutory instrument and the most recent relevant statutory instrument are noted. A full listing of in-force Acts and statutory instruments can be found in the Commission's Classified List of In-Force Legislation.

¹⁸ For agreements ratified since 1998, the hyperlink is to the full text on the ITS on the website of the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade. In other cases, the hyperlink is to the online depository of the treaty's text, such as UN. Where neither the Department nor the depository has a full text version of the treaty online, the hyperlink is to any other available and reliable source for the text.

the subject matter headings in the Commission's Classified List of In-Force Legislation. In some headings, for example International Taxation, the Commission has created 2 separate headings, one for multilateral International Taxation agreements and a separate heading for bilateral International Taxation agreements. The 38 headings in the Inventory are:

8. Draft Status of the Inventory and Invitation for Comments

The Commission emphasises that this is a draft Inventory of the International Agreements to which the State is signatory or party. While the Commission has taken a great deal of care in its preparation, there are a number of limitations to it, on which the Commission invites the comments of interested parties.

Firstly, there is the issue of linking the international agreements with relevant domestic legislation. This is most clearly the case with the major UN Conventions in Heading 17 (Human Rights), such as the 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Many of the obligations in such a Convention are open-ended and cut across many areas of law and policy. Therefore, in reality these treaties are relevant to several subject matter fields and to associated domestic legislation, some of which may have been enacted in a context other than ratification of the agreement in question.

Apart from these wide-ranging human rights treaties, the Commission's research as to corresponding domestic legislation has relied on a textual search of the main subject matter of a treaty, convention or other international agreement. As already noted,¹⁹ on certain occasions, the relevant domestic Act refers directly to a treaty, convention or agreement, and may even include its full text in a Schedule to the Act. On other occasions, the corresponding domestic legislation was located through an examination of background documents or parliamentary debates. The draft Inventory also includes a number of gaps where the relevant domestic legislation has not been identified, so that further work is required in that respect. This applies for example to certain bilateral agreements, where the Commission's work to date on the draft Inventory has not yet ascertained the corresponding domestic law.

A second limitation is that there is the possibility that the draft List is not complete: this may be so in particular in respect of pre-1922 international agreements to which the State succeeded on independence and which remain in force.²⁰

The Inventory should, therefore, be seen as a working draft. It is envisaged that the inventory will serve as a basis for public discussion and will be updated and supplemented where necessary. This was also the approach the Commission took when it first published Version 1 of the Classified List of In-Force Legislation in 2010. That draft List was published on the Commission's website and circulated to all Departments and other interested parties with a view to obtaining their views, in particular as to whether there were any errors or omissions and also whether the Departments with which each Act in the Classified List had been identified was the correct Department. While most of the entries in Version 1 of the Classified List were correct, the Commission received very helpful feedback from Departments who were able to provide corrections, and these corrections were then entered in subsequent Versions of the Classified List.

The Commission anticipates that similar assistance will be forthcoming from Departments and other interested parties for this draft Inventory of International Agreements. While the identification of relevant domestic measures is not exhaustive, it represents an attempt to clarify in a systematic manner the connection between international and domestic law. Therefore, the Commission welcomes any comments or information in this respect, so that the completeness and accuracy of future versions of the Inventory may be enhanced.

While every care has been taken in the preparation of this draft Inventory, the Law Reform Commission assumes no responsibility for and offers no guarantees, undertakings or warranties concerning the accuracy, completeness or up-to-date nature of the information provided and does not accept any liability whatsoever arising from any errors or omissions. The Commission welcomes feedback and asks users to please notify any errors, omissions and comments by email to p4p10@lawreform.ie.
